Continuous efforts are being made within the Historic District for the purpose of growing the vitality of the area, to address what was a 39% vacancy rate as well as unmaintained historic structures affecting active businesses and the greater downtown.

Ordinance changes, including prohibiting storage use of buildings and implementing the Vacant Structure Registry, have been put into place to protect the buildings in the Historic District and to assist in providing more opportunities for small businesses to be initiated and contribute to this heart of the city.

Since the time of these changes, the Historic District has had two new businesses established, with five more incoming. The potential in the Historic District is apparent and sought after by new startup businesses, and the inviting atmosphere along with these local trades offers residents with renewed civic pride and interest.

Artists of the Historic District

A great appreciation must be given to local artists who have continued to enhance the Historic District with artistic character. Local art includes the remarkable history mural in the alleyway at 316 N. Gray Street, the fall banners with a beautifully drawn sepia toned train, spring banners with lovely bluebonnet and poppy flowers, and planter boxes with unique whimsical and scenic art with incorporated bird houses.
